

Greetings from a member of the Class of '70:

I am about to be elected State Commander of The American Legion in Virginia. (Largest veteran's organization in the country) One of my major goals, approved by the power's-that-be, is to establish an American Legion Post on the internet to welcome home the approximately one million returning hero's from Iraq and Afganistan.

The online post would provide them with full legion membership and benefits as well as resources and contacts throughout the country for VA/military information plus a secure discussion area for personal contact with their buddies and shipmates.

What I need is a dot.com CEO or similar wizard with a company willing to host this website and assist in setup and support.

I envision a "myspace" style homepage open to all with links to the many American Legion programs plus a password protected section for staying in touch with their service friends in their personal chat room. Marketing genius also useful!!!

If successful, I am planning fundraising efforts to provide badly disabled returnees a lifetime Legion membership.

I am determined to provide these hero's with a warm welcome unsullied by movie moguls or hollywood has-been's.....

and I need your help! For further info on the national legion programs: www.legion.org

Thank you for your consideration.

--

Andrew C. Robertson (Andy: 12 th Company/USNA '70)
Reply to dczar0708@google.com

The American Legion
Department of Virginia